“What was meant to shield us became the storm itself — homes washed away, lives lost, and promises drowned.” Cebu’s flood control project, once hailed as a symbol of progress, now stands as a monument of neglect and poor governance.

WHEN PROTECTION BECOMES DESTRUCTION: A CALL RIZAL WOULD HAVE MADE

“The flood did not just wash away homes — it exposed how carelessness and corruption can destroy lives faster than any storm.”

When the floodwaters of Bagyong Tino struck Cebu, the people lost not only their homes but also their faith in those who promised protection. The flood control project, meant to safeguard lives, became a painful reminder that progress without integrity leads to tragedy.

If Dr. Jose Rizal were alive today, he would not stay silent. He would speak and write — not against nature’s storms, but against the storms of corruption, apathy, and misinformation that continue to harm our nation. Rizal once said, “There can be no tyrants where there are no slaves.” He would remind us that silence is surrender and that courage begins when we choose to speak the truth.

In a world flooded with fake news, Rizal would urge us to seek and defend truth. He would call on us, the youth — the hope of the nation — to be active, compassionate, and brave in facing injustice.

Our generation now holds the pen Rizal once wielded. Every post, every voice, every act of truth is a stand against corruption and indifference. If Rizal were among us, he would stand not as a hero above us but as a voice beside us — reminding us that no storm can drown the spirit of a Filipino who chooses to rise, speak, and fight for truth.

the dawn brighten
over my native land.
You who have it to see, welcome it—and forget not those who have fallen during
the night.”
